Shadow of a Bull by Maia Wojciechowska. Atheneum, 1964.

BOOKTALK

Olivar was the son of his father which may not seem like a necessary thing to say. But in Manolo's case it is. For his father had been Juan Olivar, the greatest bullfighter in all Spain, and Manolo was his son in two special ways: one, he looked just like his father; and two, everyone expected that he, Manolo Olivar, would repeat the success of his father, would be just what his father had been, a fighter of bulls and a killer of death.

No one asked Manolo if his future was his choice. He had no choice. And only he knew that the bullfighter's unconquerable urge to fight bulls was not a part of him.

The day was chosen and the bull selected for the fight that would establish Manolo's future. Caught in a web not of his making, Manolo struggles to retain his pride, his self-respect, and the independence that goes far beyond the world of bullfighters and the borders of Spain. These are the struggles of every boy in the process of becoming a man.
